Snapshot

By James M. Keller

Mark Morris created his Mozart Dances in 2006 in response to a commission from Lincoln Center for a piece to celebrate the 250th anniversary of Mozart's birth. The combination of Morris and Mozart was a fortuitous match: Morris is acclaimed for his unusual sensitivity in choreographing to classical scores, while Mozart was exceptionally adept at incorporating the language and spirit of dance into his compositions. The three pieces that provide the underpinning for Mozart Dances are all products of the composer's decade living in Vienna, where he moved in 1781 and died ten years later at the age of only 35.

Mozart's F-major Piano Concerto (K.413) was one of three he wrote to introduce himself to Viennese audiences at concerts in early 1783, as a composer—and soloist—of piano concertos. He met with more trouble than he expected getting the pieces published, a forewarning of the challenges he would meet during his Vienna decade, his extraordinary gifts notwithstanding. Even before that, Mozart had unveiled his Sonata in D major for Two Pianos (K.448), composed in 1781, just a few months after establishing himself in Vienna. He wrote it to perform with his highly accomplished pupil Josepha Barbara Auernhammer, whose musical ability he embraced even while spurning her romantic entreaties. From the final year of his life, 1791, comes his Piano Concerto in B-flat major (K.595). In this last of his magnificent sequence of piano concertos, Mozart focuses not on the virtuosity of which he was supremely capable, but rather on conveying a sense of warm-heartedness and even slight melancholy, a spirit that would often infuse the works of his final year.

WOLFGANG AMADEUS MOZART

Born January 27, 1756, in Salzburg

Died December 5, 1791, in Vienna

When the 25-year-old Mozart moved to Vienna from his native Salzburg in 1781, he had every reason to harbor optimism about his prospects. He knew that even in the musical hothouse of Vienna he would stand apart from the mass of musical functionaries who kept the city's music stands covered with new compositions. What's more, he was already acknowledged as an exceptional keyboard player.

He would capitalize on both of those talents during his golden decade in Vienna, which lasted until his premature death in 1791. He loved his urban environment, which not only supported his musical endeavors but also offered leisure activities he particularly enjoyed, such as dancing. He had appeared as a dancer in court entertainments while growing up in Salzburg and went dancing as often as he could in Vienna. He even hosted dances at home: "We actually prefer house balls," he wrote to his father in January 1783. "Last week I gave one in our apartment....We started at 6 o'clock in the evening and ended at 7;— what, only one hour?—No, No!—we ended at 7 o'clock in the morning." He composed his first dances when he was five and eventually produced some 200 of them—minuets, German dances, contredanses—many being sophisticated pieces he was required to produce as court chamber composer, a position he proudly assumed in 1787.

A dance-like spirit infuses many of Mozart's compositions. Sometimes the connection is obvious, as in the minuet movements of his symphonies or string quartets. Elsewhere, one may find it more deeply subsumed into a piece's atmosphere. This was a prevalent characteristic of Baroque music a generation or two earlier; it is no surprise that some of Mark Morris's most acclaimed choreography was created for Baroque scores. This attribute still held over through the Classical era. When Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts invited Morris to create Mozart Dances in honor of Mozart's 250th birthday in 2006, the musically gifted choreographer found a natural match in the dance-inclined composer.

The music Morris selected spans Mozart's entire Viennese decade. The F-major Piano Concerto (K.413) was one in a set of three Mozart wrote to introduce himself as a concerto soloist in his adopted city. "These concertos are a happy medium between what is too easy and too difficult," he wrote to his father. "They are very brilliant, pleasing to the ear, and natural, without being vapid. There are also passages here and there from which connoisseurs alone can derive satisfaction; but these passages are written in such a way that the less discriminating cannot fail to be pleased, though without knowing why." He probably introduced them at concerts on January 4 and January 11, 1783, and by January 15 the set was being advertised for sale "by subscription" (in manuscript only). It seems that Mozart and his selling agent found few buyers, even after they lowered the price tag by a third. The pieces were finally published in March 1785, properly engraved, under the imprint of the Viennese firm of Artaria. Genial elegance infuses this concerto, which concludes with a movement that wears its dance origins on its sleeve, a Tempo di Menuetto.

Mozart also drew a substantial strand of income from teaching. Playing the piano was a social grace popular among the daughters of aristocrats and comfortably middle-class families, and Mozart made the rounds of many of their piano benches. Some of his pupils became accomplished virtuosos: Josepha Barbara Auernhammer, for example, the daughter of an economic councilor. "She plays enchantingly," Mozart wrote to his father, "except that her Cantabile still lacks the truly delicate, singing touch." On the other hand, he reported, "She is nothing but a silly girl in love"—in love with him, actually, although he did not reciprocate the sentiment. On several occasions they appeared together in his Concerto for Two Pianos, and in September 1781 he wrote for their use this "Sonata for Two" (K.448), a tour de force of sparkling pianism and suavely interlocked musical dialogue that they unveiled at the Auernhammer home that November.

Generations of listeners have found special poignancy in the music Mozart composed in 1791, the year in which he celebrated his 35th birthday and, ten and a half months later, was buried in an unmarked grave. The first piece he completed that fateful year was his B-flat-major Piano Concerto (K.595), his final work in that genre, which he entered in his catalogue on January 5. He had begun the piece as early as 1788 and set it aside to meet other pressing deadlines, returning to focus on it in late 1790. Its nostalgic introspection and avoidance of flashy brilliance characterize the concerto style Mozart was by then cultivating. Even its orchestral sound is constrained; when the composer injects a touch of punctuation into the first movement's opening phrase, the melodic idea is fanfare-like but the orchestration—flute plus pairs of oboes, bassoons, and horns—is warm-toned rather than assertive. Each of the three movements is cast in the major mode, yet Mozart infuses his major with a measure of melancholy. The Larghetto is a model of his capacity for artless simplicity, and the main theme of the finale unpretentiously mirrors the tune of a song Mozart was penning concurrently, "Sehnsucht nach dem Frühlinge" ("Longing for Spring"), which expresses wistfully that "although Winter days have much joy," one yearns nonetheless for the green trees and blossoming violets of May.

Peter Quince at the Clavier

By Wallace Stevens

I

Just as my fingers on these keys
Make music, so the selfsame sounds
On my spirit make a music, too.

Music is feeling, then, not sound;
And thus it is that what I feel,
Here in this room, desiring you,

Thinking of your blue-shadowed silk,
Is music. It is like the strain
Waked in the elders by Susanna:

Of a green evening, clear and warm,
She bathed in her still garden, while
The red-eyed elders, watching, felt

The basses of their beings throb
In witching chords, and their thin blood
Pulse pizzicati of Hosanna.

II

In the green water, clear and warm,
Susanna lay.
She searched
The touch of springs,
And found
Concealed imaginings.
She sighed,
For so much melody.

Upon the bank, she stood
In the cool
Of spent emotions.
She felt, among the leaves,
The dew
Of old devotions.

She walked upon the grass,
Still quavering.
The winds were like her maids,
On timid feet,
Fetching her woven scarves,
Yet wavering.

A breath upon her hand
Muted the night.
She turned—
A cymbal crashed,
And roaring horns.

III
Soon, with a noise like tambourines,
Came her attendant Byzantines.

They wondered why Susanna cried
Against the elders by her side;

And as they whispered, the refrain
Was like a willow swept by rain.

Anon, their lamps' uplifted flame
Revealed Susanna and her shame.

And then, the simpering Byzantines
Fled, with a noise like tambourines.

IV
Beauty is momentary in the mind—
The fitful tracing of a portal;
But in the flesh it is immortal.

The body dies; the body's beauty lives.
So evenings die, in their green going,
A wave, interminably flowing.
So gardens die, their meek breath scenting
The cowl of winter, done repenting.
So maidens die, to the auroral
Celebration of a maiden's choral.

Susanna's music touched the bawdy strings
Of those white elders; but, escaping,
Left only Death's ironic scraping.
Now, in its immortality, it plays
On the clear viol of her memory,
And makes a constant sacrament of praise.

Mostly Mozart Festival

Celebrating its 50th anniversary, Lincoln Center's Mostly Mozart Festival—America's first indoor summer music festival—was launched as an experiment in 1966. Called Midsummer Serenades: A Mozart Festival, its first two seasons were devoted exclusively to the music of Mozart. Now a New York institution, Mostly Mozart has broadened its focus to include works by Mozart's predecessors, contemporaries, and related successors. In addition to concerts by the Mostly Mozart Festival Orchestra, Mostly Mozart now includes concerts by the world's outstanding period-instrument ensembles, chamber orchestras and ensembles, and acclaimed soloists, as well as opera productions, dance, film, and late-night performances. Contemporary music has become an essential part of the festival, embodied in annual artists-in-residence including Osvaldo Golijov, John Adams, Kaija Saariaho, Pierre-Laurent Aimard, and the International Contemporary Ensemble. Among the many artists and ensembles who have had long associations with the festival are Joshua Bell, Christian Tetzlaff, Itzhak Perlman, Emanuel Ax, Garrick Ohlsson, Stephen Hough, Osmo Vänskä, the Emerson String Quartet, Freiburg Baroque Orchestra, Orchestra of the Age of Enlightenment, and the Mark Morris Dance Group.

Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, Inc.

A presenter of more than 3,000 free and ticketed events, performances, tours, and educational activities annually, LCPA offers 15 programs, series, and festivals, including American Songbook, Great Performers, Lincoln Center Festival, Lincoln Center Out of Doors, Midsummer Night Swing, the Mostly Mozart Festival, and the White Light Festival, as well as the Emmy Award-winning Live From Lincoln Center, which airs nationally on PBS.
